Extensive U.S. naval maneuvers were underway in the Caribbean, involving about 40 ships, 20,000 men and carrier-based aircraft. This caused much speculation that the U.S. might be about to make a major move in the Cuban crisis. The official explanation for a U.S. military buildup in the Florida-Caribbean area in recent days was that the U.S. is holding its annual naval maneuvers off Puerto Rico.

Former President Eisenhower said he doesn't think the Kennedy Administration's current foreign policy should be a campaign issue, but he defended the GOP's right to discuss policy matters "that are history" and "long-range implications of U.S. foreign policy. Speaking on ABC-TV's Politics '62, he said he brought up Cuba and Berlin in a recent Boston speech because Kennedy had sought to blame the Eisenhower Administration for letting these crises develop.
